

The recent news of terrorist acts by ISIS and al Qaeda demands action from our government that is absent from the current policy debates. To this day, the terrorist financiers of 9/11 have not been held accountable and are free to further fund terrorism. Only Congress can change that.

Since 9/11, we have learned about many different ways to fight radical Islamic terrorism. One very effective way is to cut off their money – bankrupt them. However U.S. courts have continually offered contradictory rulings as to whether these financiers are accountable in U.S. courts.

There is legislation pending in Congress that seeks to dry up terrorist funding and bankrupt terrorists who vow to kill and destroy us. I call upon [put the name of your Senators and Representative here] and President Obama to support S.2040 and H.R. 3815, the Justice Against Sponsors of Terrorism Act (“JASTA”).

Without money terrorists cannot recruit, travel, run training camps or buy bomb-making materials.